This training will look at how a child's experiences (both traumatic and non-traumatic) play into the overall brain development over their life span. How to help children build resiliency will be discussed. A deeper look into the child's behavior, how to observe that behavior and correlate it to where they are at in their brain development will be covered, which will in turn assist the caregiver in creating an optimal learning environment based on knowledge of where each child's brain functioning is as they approach an activity, challenge, learning, etc. Activities that promote neurointegration will also be discussed.
